Date: 7th November 2010 - For Immediate Release

Winners of the 2010 NORAs revealed

After months of nominations, shortlisting, and judging, the winners of this year's 10th annual National Online Recruitment Awards have been announced. The new venue was Sway London, in Covent Garden, and on Thursday 4th November, there wasn't anywhere else any self-respecting online recruiter would have wanted to be.

Everyone who is anyone was part of the over 300-strong audience, including those from 66 Finalists for the 13 awards. The 13th award was a particular high point, as it recognised the recruitment website that had made the greatest contribution to online recruitment since the NORAs began. The Recruitment Website of the Decade award was shortlisted to 8 Finalists, who all had video presentations shown on the night, between the usual award categories. The winner, who can now claim bragging rights until 2020, was Jobsite, who also walked away with the Best Generalist Job Board award too. Felix Wetzel, Jobsite's Group marketing Director, was on hand to accept the awards with colleagues, and gave a great speech, including a promise of even better to come from the Portsmouth shirt sponsors.

All night the noisy crowd were particularly vocal, especially when their own sites were announced. As ever, it's great to see the genuine enthusiasm from our worthy winners. Of course, not every one left with a trophy, and there were healthy debates on the results. However, all Finalists were clear that it was a great achievement to have got to this stage, and left further determined to return next year.
